by Nellie Jacobs

What is the prospective job market for young people just starting out? What possible re-employment opportunities might be available for anyone forced to start over? What about active baby-boomers now on the verge of retirement, who want to continue living meaningful lives? What is the future for anyone considering a life change, whether public or private? How can people creatively identify and achieve their goals? What are their potential options, strategies, and resources?

Making Opportunity Knock is the first book in this inspirational series that addresses these pressing questions—and much more. Chapters are packed with probing interviews, practical tips, inspiring quotes and challenging exercises to ignite the imagination of anyone who wants to learn more about themselves, and how to use that knowledge to forge a meaningful future in the bigger world.

The metaphor of mining illuminated for me how we sometimes have to dig deep and work hard to find pure gold, precious gems or fuel for firing our imagination.
